Mark Campbell has gathered some impressive accolades over his musical career, but his focus has always been "to help reveal and perpetrate the genius of Appalachian mountain culture". Since his childhood in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, Mark Campbell traveled around the region, collecting and playing the old style of music, and learning techniques and styles from some last generation of great musicians of North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia.

In 2008 Mark was named the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities' Master fiddler. He was also the 2001 Champion Fiddler at the Appalachian String Band Festival at Clifftop, West Virginia, has twice won the State Fair of Virginia fiddle contest, and has won the West Virginia State Folkfestival banjo and fiddle competitions. With his wife, Marty Gravett (cello and guitar) , and their daughters Molly (fretless banjo and mandolin) and Mauren (cello, vocals and guitar), Mark continues the old tradition of passing music down through the family.
